

PODCASTS

Undoubtedly you have heard of podcasts and know that they provide varying information on a wide variety of topics. Some are of course better than others as it relates to quality, however, many contain interesting and important information often given by experts in the field. Choose a podcast that interests you that is between 30 minutes to 1 hour and actively listen to what is being said. Use the template below to practice taking notes on the fly on the categories indicated.

Possible podcasts:

(but you can choose ones other than these suggestions)

Uncivil

Focuses on the Civil War, but not the Civil War you'd expect. Each episode focuses on a single story, and most are more focused on the social history of the Civil War, and the stories that haven't been told. It explores some of the common myths associated with the Civil War.

Stuff You Should Know

The podcast that brings you the “ins and outs of everyday things” from the This history of soda, to Mexican Jumping Beans to “Is there such a thing as truth serum?”

StarTalk Radio

Neil deGrasse Tyson talks about all things space: stars, planets, humans in space, and so much more. He also interviews a lot of amazing people, from Buzz Aldrin to Black Holes.

The Allusionist

Explore the English language, with all its oddities! Filled with good humor and levity, this podcast will help you explore the roots of words and phrases that we use every day.

Stuff You Missed in History Class

The title speaks for itself. Learn about people and events that are often overlooked in a typical history class.

Youth Radio

Youth Radio is a podcast for teens, published by teens. It was created to showcase the power of young people as makers of media, technology, and community. It brings the teen perspective to issues of public concern.

Freakonomics Radio

A podcast created by the co-author of Freakonomics and Superfreakonomics, Stephen Dubner invites listeners to explore the hidden sides of everything. And, given his almost 300 episodes on topics ranging from Millionaires vs. Billionaires to How to Win a Nobel Prize, he is well on his way to talking about everything.

Radiolab

Radiolab is a show about curiosity. Where sound illuminates ideas, and the boundaries blur between science, philosophy, and human experience.
